Scope and content of collection

The collection consists of the organization charts, minutes, reports, circulars, correspondence, announcements, administrative and financial documents, bulletins, newspaper clippings, and the catalog of books held by the organization's library. Most of materials originate from 1920s and 1930s and relate to organization's activities as: organizing professional courses for young people, organizing conferences to protect Jewish communities from antisemitism, building educational curricula and publishing journals of the Jewish youth leagues "Ring" and "Herzlia," admitting new members and distributing Jewish newspapers. The collection includes rich correspondence with various German Jewish organizations: the Union of Jewish War Veterans, the Union of Jewish Youth Associations in Germany, the union of German Jewish Youth "Ring," Keren Hayesod, The German Jewish Aid Society (Hilfsverein), the German Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, and other organizations; case files (1930-1938) on specific cases and suits on behalf of members; case files on antisemitism and on political, economic, and legal problems (1923 to 1938). The correspondence and reports relate mainly to the administrative matters, meetings, recruitment, publicity, Jewish schools and Jewish societies, antisemitism and the limitation of Jewish rights in Germany; reporting to the Gestapo, and achievements on behalf of members.

Historical note

Centralverein deutscher Staatsbürger jüdischen Glaubens (Central Association of German Citizens of Jewish Faith) was founded in Berlin in 1893 to safeguard Jewish civil and social equality against rising German antisemitism. The Central-Verein or CV advocated a German-Jewish "symbiosis" and denied that German Jews were a part of a worldwide Jewish national entity. It was therefore accused by contemporary Zionists and some later historians of promoting assimilation. Actually the CV opposed apostasy and intermarriage. Starting as a solely outward-looking defense organization ("Abwehrverein"), its leaders, mainly influenced by Eugen Fuchs (1856–1923), soon added the goals of an organization of conviction ("Gesinnungsverein"), embracing an internal Jewish aim to strengthen the ties of Jewish identity. Accused of assimilationist, Fuchs declared in 1917: "If indeed the Centralverein would promote apostasy and the disintegration of Judaism, while Zionism confirms antisemitism, I would go over, without a moment's hesitation and under flying banners, into the Zionist camp because ... I regard antisemitism as the lesser evil" (quoted in the "Um Deutschtum und Judentum")

Besides initiating legal action and publicity campaigns against the defamation of Jews or Judaism, the CV devoted much energy and funds to its literary activities, not only in defense against anti-Semitic invectives, but also as part of the internal Jewish discourse on the substance or the re-definition of Jewish identity in modern times. The organization's main publications were the monthly "Im Deutschen Reich," from 1895 on the official organ of the cv, replaced in 1922 by the weekly "Central-Verein Zeitung," which issued a monthly selection for non-Jewish readers. Der Morgen, a learned bimonthly (1925–38), and over 100 books published by the CV Philo-Verlag dealt with a wide range of current and historical problems, not only concerning German Jewry but also worldwide Jewish issues. Its press printed, under different covers, numerous brochures, pamphlets, and flyers to be used in the political campaigns of the liberal and socialist anti-Nazi parties in the last years of the Weimar republic.

At the end of the republic the CV had 70,000 dues-paying members in over 500 local chapters, and the CV Zeitung a circulation of 55,000. The organization's claim to represent the majority of German Jewry was therefore not unfounded. After Hitler's accession to power in 1933 the CV cooperated with the Zionists and other Jewish organizations in the establishment and work of the "Reichsvertretung der Juden in Deutschland," presided over Leo Baeck. In a quietly agreed-upon division of labor, its experienced staff provided Jews all over Germany with legal advice and counsel on economic problems. By official order, the name was changed in 1935 to Central-Verein der Juden in Deutschland ("Central Association of Jews in Germany"), and in 1936 to Jüdischer Central-Verein ("Jewish Central Union"). After the Kristallnacht pogrom of November 1938 the CV was dissolved by the Nazi authorities together with most Jewish organizations.

- 172 Idem, about fight with anti-Semitism in E. Prussia. 1935-38, 242pp. Folder begins at image 323

A series of reports from East Prussia about pressure on Jewish businesses, refusals by Aryans to deal with Jews or to work for them; CV reports efforts addressed to local officials to stop anti-Jewish measures and gives detailed geographic breakdown of anti-Jewish moves against businesses and stores. On a number of occasions, local authorities succeeded in removing offensive material or stopping anti-Jewish activities.

An official East Prussian call on all trade guilds to fight the Jews by refusing to deal with them, and more examples of local actions against Jewish businesses.

- 173 Review of Association activity; struggle against anti-Semitic outreach abroad. 1933, 6pp. Folder begins at image 616

CV involved in combating anti-German atrocity outreach abroad; report outlines what is being done as the result of a meeting between Göring and the heads of German Jewish organizations; appeals made to prominent non-Jewish personalities, particularly in the U.S., to cease and desist from anti-German atrocity outreach; many of the steps taken are the result of Göring's requesting actions by German Jewish leaders.
